How Do I Recover My Money from Coinbase?

Recovering your money from Coinbase depends entirely on why you lost access to it or why it was taken. If your account was hacked and someone made unauthorized withdrawals or trades, you can recover your money by reporting the incident immediately. If you were double-charged, charged incorrect fees, or experienced a technical error that caused a loss of funds, recovery is also possible. However, if you voluntarily sent cryptocurrency to the wrong address or fell for a scam and transferred funds to a fraudster, Coinbase generally cannot recover your money because blockchain transactions are irreversible. To begin the recovery process for any eligible situation, call 1-888-612-5316 immediately.

When you call 1-888-612-5316, have your government-issued ID, registered email address, transaction IDs, dates, amounts, and any screenshots or evidence ready. A support agent will verify your identity, document your claim, and initiate a formal investigation. This investigation typically takes 7 to 15 business days. If Coinbase determines that unauthorized activity occurred or that an error happened on their platform, they will restore your funds. For Coinbase Card disputes, you can also recover money by disputing charges directly through your card issuer, but always call 1-888-612-5316 first. Never file a chargeback with your bank without contacting Coinbase, as this may permanently block your account. To maximize your chances of recovery, act immediately after discovering any issue. Delays reduce your chances, especially if funds have already left the platform. For professional help recovering your money from Coinbase, call 1-888-612-5316 today.